Part-time lecturers – Fall Semester 2018
(two positions available)

Harlaxton College, the British Study Abroad Centre of the University of Evansville, Indiana, USA, wishes to appoint two fixed-term part-time lecturers to contribute to the teaching during the Fall semester 2018

Lecturers are required for:

Astronomy:

The Descriptive Astronomy course covers the following topics:

a) The view from Earth - Scales, Positions, and Motions of the night sky
b) How it all works – Kepler’s laws, Gravity, and the Solar system
c) Brave new worlds – Jovian planets, Asteroids, and Exoplanets
d) A sky full of stars – The Sun, Stellar properties, and Stellar evolution
e) Island universes – The Milky Way and Galaxies

Environmental Science:

The Fundamentals of Environmental Science Course studies the interdisciplinary nature of problems relating to the human environment, including social, political, and economic aspects. It is designed for students who are interested in exploring more about current environmental issues. They will examine the impact that humanity has on the environment and discuss strategies to diminish those effects. In order to understand specific issues of this field, the focus of many lectures will centre on the biological, chemical, and geological bases of current environmental problems. Emphasis will be placed on species interactions, nutrient cycles, the basis of climate, and sources of energy. The course consists of lecture/discussions, quizzes, exams, and writing assignments.

Qualifications:

- Masters’ degree in relevant subject area is required.
- University level teaching experience highly desirable

These positions are part-time and fixed-term appointments (late August 2018 until first week of December 2018) and the Salary, per course, will be in the range £2,800 - £3,000.

Harlaxton College and Harlaxton Manor

Harlaxton College is the British Study Abroad Centre of the University of Evansville, Indiana, USA. Located in the English East Midlands, it offers unrivalled study abroad facilities to students from Evansville and some twenty-five partner colleges/universities and has recently been judged the No. 1 Study Abroad programme in the USA.

The College is housed in the remarkable surrounding of Harlaxton Manor. Built between 1832 and 1854, the Manor is an exuberant merging of Gothic, ‘Jacobethan’, and Baroque styles. Constructed at the beginning of the Victorian age it reflects the early 19th century’s rejection of Enlightenment order and balance in favour of the heightened emotion of Romanticism. However, beneath its ‘natural’ exterior, the house and gardens reflect the engineering prowess of an industrial Britain and the social divisions of Victorian society. This was a period in which concepts of ‘Britishness’ were evolving, becoming fused with notions of history, empire, and class. Harlaxton students, therefore, learn about Britain in a house that evokes many of the complexities of British identity.
